

When Law Lord's girl marries Law Lord's boy

A HANDFUL of Scotland's Law Lords 700 guests, a sizeable chunk of the police force and 10 white buses came to the wedding in Edinburgh yesterday of Miss Betty Thomson, a great-granddaughter of Andrew Carnegie.

HER father is Lord Migdale.

The 'groom, advocate Mr. James Milligan, is Lord Milligan's son.

Hence, not unnaturally, the strong arm of the law.

From early morning the two squares adjoining St. Giles' Cathedral were sealed off for guests' cars.

Traffic came to a halt in the High-street when the bride arrived — wearing her mother's wedding gown — and there was a policeman at every junction when the entourage set off (vintage family Rolls for the bride, buses for the guests) for the reception.

One guest arrived on a stretcher: Miss Evelyn McGowan broke her leg two weeks ago but was determined not to miss the big day.

Ten bridesmaids—six of them children—rustled down the aisle in apricot silk but it was the bride's dress—with seven-foot train—that drew gasps of admiration.
