

Dear Captain Rose -

I have been thinking over your report on the signalling, and it is disheartening. Why have any signallers unless they are quite efficient, and why give them no encouragement to be efficient? and yet I have done my best for I have pointed out what, I think, may be given, and a reward is the

On His Majesty's Service.

Private,

Captain R. Rose

Commandant

School of Signalling.

Robert Heigh.

m^h results. I believe greatly in the great value of signallers, the more so because I have no great faith in telephone lines remaining intact on a battle field, lots of all useless units give me an unmanageable part of signallers, and as far as I can make out there will be a certain number under that category unless the authorities hold out more inducements than they do at present.

I am thankful the regimental inspection is abolished, and cannot understand how it was ever introduced.

Yours truly,
Robert Heigh.

1.
9.